

AMONG THE EXCHANGES
OF THE INLAND EMPIRE

Uncle Sam vs. Baker City.

Superintendent Terrell, of the Baker City watershed forest reserve, has closed down the Rock Creek power plant of the Baker City Gas & Electric Light Company. The power plant was closed by order of the inland empire department, because the electric light company has violated the rules and regulations of the department in regard to forest reservations.

The power house conveys water to the power house runs across that portion of the forest reserve for a distance of three-quarters of a mile. The rules require that where it is necessary to occupy any portion of the forest of a forest reserve for private public use, a formal application, with plans and surveys of the ground occupied, must be filed with the department and approved by the secretary of the interior. This formality was neglected by the electric light company, when it built its pipeline across Uncle Sam's reserve.

The company was duly notified of violation of the rules and the injunction was to comply with the regulations, but the matter was neglected until Superintendent Terrell received a temporary order to shut off the water. Fortunately the company has a steam plant in Baker City from which it is able to supply light and power, and the demand is scarcely equal to the supply.

History of Osteopathy

The principles of Osteopathy were announced by Dr. Andrew T. Still in 1874. For ten years he labored alone establishing the system. In 1894, with a few students he opened the American School of Osteopathy at Kirksville, Mo., now grown to a college of over seven hundred students. From other colleges have been founded by graduates of this school, some of them mere diploma mills. The number of graduates of the standard schools now number over four thousand.

July 13 was set apart by the World's board as Osteopathic day, when thousands of osteopaths met in convention for a week's session.

Twenty-five states have passed laws regulating the practice. Legislation is being asked for in many more states. In winter, Oregon being one. To be competent Osteopathy requires a course equal to the medical schools, all branches and superior in some. The legislature will doubtless come to the aid of the public, and to the relief of the osteopaths.

The law is passed ask for the Osteopaths diploma.
